Yesterday

I was calling because I'm very worried about winter.

We've gone fast on releasing lockdown.

New cases entering track & trace starting to rise

And I'm getting no traction on doing what's needed to protect the NHS this winter.

We can either take a risk on releasing lockdown, OR we can take a risk on not building up the NHS this winter.

We can't do both.

The second - 10,000 extra beds - is far cheaper. But if we decide against that then I can't see how we can take any more steps out of lockdown.

What's the evidence on rising new cases ?
Haven't seen that yet

The number of cases going into is test & trace is still very low but ticking up. Likewise the ONS survey shows the number of new cases is flat not falling any more. Deaths thankfully still coming down.
