That would be helpful, thanks. And thank you for that email too!

Yeah, comms will be comms. I had a third call just now from Cabinet Office to reinforce the fact that No10 have run the odd campaign before.

Talking points:

Publications

- 1) Academics have a way of doing things, and colleagues in government have a way of doing things. In any culture clash the best route is always to assume good faith. If something has gone wrong, the best option is just to ask. Nine times of ten, the secretariat can sort things out pretty quickly.
- 2) In this case, there is a principle around FoI that has been set out by information commissioner that allows policy makers space to develop policy and get advice on different options, without putting it in the public domain. As I understand it the redactions were actually there to allow the document to go out by withholding the bits that talked about ongoing policy. As we saw tonight, that wasn't bluster, they genuinely were still considering increasing fines. But we could have insisted that it be explained better in the document.
- 3) There are other documents beyond the redacted one that we need released and that haven't been discussed. And in future, we need to work out a procedure on this should they automatically go out 2 weeks / 1 month after sign off? Can we release the supporting paperwork which is more detailed?

Communications

- 4) SPI-B has a pretty tight remit, which is to be the behavioural science group for SAGE. We can also help with comms if we are asked, but only if we are asked. We aren't the lead psychology group for government.
- 5) We are not going to agree with everything govt does. That's fine. As academics, you can express whatever view you want and put your name to it. But we all agreed not to discuss the conversations we have in SPI-B and that's important so that we feel safe to have a debate and policy colleagues can feel safe discussing quandaries with us. If we want to influence policy, that's the trade off they need to trust us.
- 6) NR has offered to say a bit about how the slogan was developed (it was very locked down she wasn't involved) and to discuss the reality of how to get policymakers to approach us about communication issues. Bringing in a group of 30 untamed professors is scary. But two or three who can be trusted to offer advice and then leave the decision to govt might work.

As you know, completely with you on this (which is why I tried to calm things down by indicating not everyone on SPI-B felt we needed to write a letter!) – when we did the principles for changing restrictions I gave an example slogan of

'Keep Safe' but specifically took it our because you said the comms people would want to do their own so better not to even suggest an example one.

I think we should probably all say something tomorrow just to make sure you don't feel that it is you on your own? I know when I was Head of School and had to make hard decisions I was always very disappointed that people who I knew privately supported me wouldn't do so publicly. I am happy to make the point about it really not being the best way to do behaviour change!

Best wishes, Lucy

Lucy – I spoke to Brooke before sending this, but just FYI that call from Patrick was about the email chain to express concern about SAGE getting drawn into a govt operational move and losing reputation as a result. Hence that email.

I have also separately had another call from a person in the know to say that No10 is concerned about our correspondence on this (presumably because we cc'd half of govt into it).

Thanks - though to be honest I just proof read the excellent work from the LSHTM team on that paper!

On this slogan business, I do think we need to be careful about where our remit lies. There is a difference between what 'SPI-B' does (which is solely to respond to requests from SAGE for behavioural science), and what we as independent academics are interested in.

So while I agree that the slogan is pretty banal, SPI-B is not responsible (and does not want to be responsible) for all behavioural science across government. We have put an offer out there to help on comms if depts are interested, but it is just an offer, not a requirement.

So, and this is the point of me going against my own 'leave it till tomorrow' request, can I ask that if anyone is tempted to make a comment on the slogan tonight, please do so in your own right, but not as a SPI-B member.

	I don't think Stay Alert is a particularly good slogan but I don't think you can have a behaviourally specific slogan given ł	now many behaviours there are - the tweet does specify several of them. There is lots of advice we have given that nasn't/probably won't be followed, not sure I would pick a fight on the messaging myself.

We have learnt so much from Donald Trump But seriously, I think it would still be helpful for James to write such a message now and I think it is all the more important we discuss the issue tomorrow - if nothing else to help us all learn rom our mistakes. But also for the sake of posterity.

To add to the points already made:

- 1. We advise, ministers decide
- 2. Our advice has not been sought on what we believe is a new message that will go live at 7pm ie before SPI-B meeting tomorrow.

3. We have good reason to believe that this new message not only misses an opportunity to provide behaviourally specific and precise advice but also has the potential to do much damage thereby increasing R0 with all the expected negative health and economic consequences.

My proposal: James - as Chair of SPI-B - writes now to the Chair of SAGE documenting our concerns in the hope that he may be able to intervene before 7pm.

You certainly are not a lone worrier, Susan. I worry

- 1. that (if reports are accurate) this new advice is disastrous and will do damage in many ways not least leading to different approaches in different parts of the UK and so creating a sense of inequity as well as confusion
- 2. that there is a danger that (as well as 'behavioural fatigue') this will be perceived as having a 'behavioural science' imprint and so undermine us both individually and at a disciplinary level.

Insofar as it raises issues about our general role and remit, and hence frames everything else, I also agree that it should be at the top of the agenda.

Given recent developments, I would like to suggest that item 6. be brought higher up the agenda and that we consider adding an item about our role and impact. The reason for suggesting this is that I was sent a message yesterday informing me that new messaging had been centrally trailed and would be "stay alert, control the virus and save lives". I sincerely hope that this is incorrect as it goes against several principles we have rehearsed many times in our advice to SAGE/Government - e.g. being behaviourally specific and being precise about what we are asking people to do. If it turns out to be true, it would be helpful to understand why we were not consulted given we have a bespoke

Dear NR, James and colleague,

I would be interested in others' views about this as I am worried about how things appear to be developing - and am not sure if I am a lone worrier - obviously we will have more information this evening.

Dear all,
This is an invite for the Behavioural Science sub-group, SPI-B reporting to SAGE.
Timings: The meeting will be held on Monday 11 May between 13:00 and 14:30. We are looking to establish a standing for SPI-B meetings, so going forward, SPI-B will meet at this time every Monday until further notice.	time
Please do not forward this invitation without prior agreement from the SAGE Secretariat.
PLEASE NOTE: This meeting will take place over zoom
Irrelevant & Sensitive

Instructions:

- 1. 1 In order to join the call, you have two options:
- * Download the Zoom app and log in or join the meeting as a guest (joining via the app does not require a Zoom account).
- * Launch Zoom from your browser using the link above. You must click on the option 'launch from browser' or the call will fail. Zoom now requires all users joining via a browser to have a registered account. Please ensure you set this up prior to the meeting.
 - 2. Enter the Meeting ID, password and name when prompted.
 - 4. Please keep all microphones on mute unless you would like to come in and speak.
 - 5. This is a video conference SPI-B members expecting to speak should have their cameras on throughout.

6. If you are dialling-in, please email the SAGE secretariat with the last 3 digits of your phone number, so that we are aware of who is present on the call. For security reasons, unidentified and uninvited participants and observers will be removed from the meeting.

Upon logging in please use your full name.

Tentative Agenda:

- 1. Introduction
- 2. Situation update
- 3. 'Bubbling'
- 4. Adherence amongst healthcare workers

A more detailed agenda and papers will follow.

All participants must be agreed with the Secretariat in advance and if you wish to nominate other attendees, you must inform the SAGE secretariat in advance of the meeting.

If you have further questions or would like to circulate a comment to attendees, please do not reply on this chain, but contact the SAGE Secretariat directly.

Whilst open invitations are issued to all ongoing participants of SPI-B, participants are only expected to attend a given meeting if discussions on the agenda are in an area of their expertise.

Please note that through attending this meeting, you agree to treat the discussion as confidential and do not discuss the contents outside of that setting. You may continue to speak to the media as an independent expert but not as a SPI-B participant.
