Subject: RE: URGENT face Coverings PN for clearance

Hi Name Redacted

The only change that was made was to take the last sentence out in the first para. According to Clare, we haven't set a date yet. With that change, the Minister has cleared the PN.

Any problems, let me know
Cheers

Three-layer face coverings recommended, but not mandatory, in certain situations in Wales

The Welsh Government is following updated advice from the World Health Organisation (WHO) and recommending people in Wales wear three-layer face coverings in situations where social distancing is not possible. ~~This advice will be adopted from Monday 15 June 2020, at the same time as proposed changes in England come into force.~~

The evidence remains clear that maintaining a 2 metre distance and good hand hygiene is the most effective way to protect yourself and others from contracting coronavirus, but the updated guidance from the WHO says three layer face coverings could help provide some control of the virus in specific circumstances.

This updated advice only applies to people who are not showing symptoms of coronavirus. People who are symptomatic must self-isolate for seven days and get a test, as set out in existing guidance. Unless the test shows a negative result, they must not go out during this time, even with a face covering or mask.

Health Minister Vaughan Gething said: "Washing your hands, avoiding touching your face and maintaining a 2 metre distance from others remain the best way of stopping the spread of the virus.

"On Friday, the WHO updated their guidance on face coverings, advising that they should be considered in settings where maintaining social distancing is difficult. However, to be crystal clear, wearing a face covering does not replace the need for social distancing or washing your hands regularly.

"Further scientific evidence is needed on the benefits to the wider public of wearing face coverings, but observational findings so far suggest that homemade or purchased three-layer face-coverings might reduce transmission from one person to another if made, worn, handled and disposed of properly.

"Therefore, on balance, we are recommending to the people of Wales that three-layer face-coverings should be used in situations where social distancing measures can be more difficult to achieve, for example, on public transport. We are not recommending their use outdoors.

"The wearing of face coverings will not be mandatory, but we will encourage people to do this for the benefit of themselves and others."

The Minister stressed that this advice only applies to people who are not showing symptoms of coronavirus, adding: "Anyone who has a high temperature, a new, continuous cough or a loss or change to their sense of smell or taste must self-isolate for a minimum of seven days and get a test as quickly as possible. Unless the test shows a negative result, people must not go out during this time, even with a face covering or mask."

Notes

To provide any protection to others, face coverings need to be made, worn, handled and disposed of in a certain way.

The WHO recommends a minimum of three layers in a face covering, which should include:

- An inner layer of absorbent material, such as cotton
- A middle layer of non-woven material, such as polypropylene
- An outer layer of non-absorbent material, such as polyester or polyester-blend

Hi all – Draft PN below – grateful if you can get back ASAP with any comments or let me know if you're happy.

Three-layer face coverings recommended, but not mandatory, in certain situations in Wales

The Welsh Government is following WHO advice and recommending people in Wales wear three-layer face coverings in situations where social distancing is not possible. But they will not be mandatory.

Health Minister Vaughan Gething today (9 June) said the evidence remains clear that face coverings are not the most effective way to protect yourself and others from COVID-19.

He said: "Washing your hands, avoiding touching your face, and social distancing remain the best way of stopping the spread of the virus.

But the WHO have now said face coverings should be considered in settings where this could be difficult, however it does not replace the need for those measures.

A homemade or purchased three-layer face-covering might reduce transmission from one person to another if made, worn, handled and disposed of properly. However scientific evidence is still not robust on the benefits of face coverings, based mainly on observational findings so far, although further studies are expected.

Therefore, on balance, we are recommending to the public that three-layer face-coverings should be used in situations where social distancing measures can be more difficult to achieve, for example public transport.

This will not be mandatory, but we will encourage people to do this for the benefit of themselves and others."

The Minister added that this advice only applies to people who are not symptomatic.

People who are symptomatic should not be in the situations described, but must self-isolate for seven days and get a test, as set out in existing guidance. Unless the test shows a negative result, they must not go out during this time, even with a face covering or mask.

Notes

To provide any protection to others, face coverings need to be made, worn, handled and disposed of in a certain way.

- A middle layer of non-woven material, such as polypropylene

Thanks – Fliss, is there anything out there you'd recommend us using as a guide to what a face covering should consist of/where to get one/how to make them? The WHO list of layers is quite technical.

So for now:

12.30 - press conference; press notice; press notice published to web; social media needed

ASAP after 12.30 – further info on website (Q&A in development), plus visual explainer of face covering to be worked up

Do we want to grab a quick video of someone (CMO? Minister?) running through the key messages?

Hi – is the TAG paper being published?

I've started work on a Q&A, attached, and will develop some of it into bullets.

Importance: High

I'm really concerned about the handling of the 1230 press conference following the 9am call. I don't believe that any announcement beyond a position on non-mandatory face coverings, following the WHO change of position, is deliverable in comms terms in a way that will not raise very significant questions from a large number of stakeholders and the public, including those brought up at the meeting.

As raised at the meeting, the TAG paper will bring with it a huge number of queries and demands for us to take a policy position with really major implications, like provision of medical grade masks to vulnerable groups. Can we distil the announcement to a series of bullet points now and work on those urgently, and agree with MHSS that any questions beyond these (and specifically on the use of medical grade masks) will be pushed beyond today to the more detailed sectoral guidance, developed with stakeholders, and that the full TAG report will also be published once there is a clearer position on all the issues.

How about this:

Following the change in advice from the WHO on face coverings at the end of last week, we have asked our Technical Advisory Group to look again at the position in Wales.*

A homemade or purchased face covering might reduce the transmission of SARS-CoV2 from one person to another if made, worn, handled and disposed of properly. Scientific evidence is not robust on the benefits of face coverings, with mainly observational findings supporting the role in preventing transmission. It should be noted that this has not been extensively studied to date, and further studies are expected.*

Face coverings should be considered when in settings where other control measures or other control methods for reducing exposure are not effective and other measures such as social distancing remain of critical importance and should not be relaxed when wearing a face covering.*

Following careful consideration, we have decided that we will, from Monday, strongly recommend to the public that face coverings should be used in situations where social distancing measures can be more difficult to achieve, for example public transport. This will not be mandatory, but we will encourage people to do this for the benefit of themselves and others.*
